Kenneth Merkel
National Energy Technology Lab

Mr. Merkel will present a perspective on our nation's and the world's energy supply and usage. He will speak about the advanced technologies being developed to meet future energy needs and environmental constraints, and provide an update on current federal climate change legislation being considered by congress.

Mr. Merkel's knowledge of energy technology, from both a federal and industry perspective, is the result of over 30 years working in the field. Prior to starting KEM Consulting in 2008, Mr. Merkel worked at the Department of Energy's National Energy Technology Laboratory for over 28 years where he worked on the development of advanced energy and environmental control technologies.

From 1996 to his retirement in 2007 he was an Associate Director and member of the NETL executive board, supervising the technical management of contracted research, development, and demonstration activities to improve the efficiency and minimize the environmental impact of producing energy. His projects included advanced power generation, environmental control, ultra-clean fuels, unconventional natural gas extraction and environmental technologies to clean up DOE's former nuclear production sites. In 1999 he was appointed to the Federal Senior Executive Service.
